

What Are the Six C's of Nursing?

Are you thinking about becoming a nurse? Do you ever think about what makes a nurse invaluable to his or her patients? The best nurses give much more than their time and talent. Those nurses are often most effective because they embody the six Cs of nursing.

Commitment

A nurse's commitment should be an enduring inner resolve to provide outstanding care for their patients. You won't be able to cure everyone's ailments, but you must always try your best regardless of the outcome.

Care

Caring for a patient requires more than just taking temperatures or changing dressings. A nurse that genuinely cares about their patients will have a significant impact on their overall health and wellbeing.

Competence

Competence in nursing requires rigorous training. Nurses should possess both the theoretical and practical knowledge necessary to treat their patients. At the same time, nurses should understand that learning is a never-ending process. They should always be open to advancing their expertise and broadening their horizons.

Compassion

Being exposed to the constant pain and discomfort of patients can cause some people to become numb to the suffering of the people in their care. That's why compassion is a necessary attribute for every nurse to possess. A compassionate nurse will give their patients the empathy and respect they deserve.

Communication

Communication skills are necessary in almost every profession. However, they bear special significance in the healthcare industry. Clear and concise communication is essential among nurses and physicians as it prevents medical errors from happening. It also helps ensure each patient gets the proper and speedy care they need.

Courage

A successful nurse is a leader and an advocate for their patients. Nurses should keep patients safe and be constantly striving to do what's in their best interests, even when that's difficult.

Are You Interested in a Nursing Career?

Call 866-529-2070